The following letter is from the continuation of Dr Franklin's works, now at press.

To Wm. Strahan, Esq. King's Printer, London. Passr, August 19, 1784.

I have now that letter before me; and my which have off with much grace—and around myse, f more than justified in supposing grandson, whom you may formerly remember her neck was a white tace long shawl. a little scholar at Mr. Ephinston's, purposing to set out, in a day or two, on a visit to his father in London. I set down to scribble a little bridles were also trimmed with white satin ribto you, first recommending him, as a worthy bon, with white roses on either side their

the fund of knowledge you promise to communicate to me, is an addition to them, and no small one. At present it is impracticable, But, when my grandson returns, come with him. We will talk the matter over, and perh ps you may take me back with you. I have bed at your service, and will try to make our residence, while you can stay with us, as agreeable to you, if possible, as I am sure it will be to me.

You " fairly acknowledge, that the late war terminated qui e contrary to your expecta-tion." Y ur expectation was ill founded; for you would not believe your old friend who told ou, repeatedly, that by those measures, England would lose her colonies, as Epictetus warned, in vain, his master, that he would break his leg. You believed rather the tales you heard of our poltroonery, and impotence of body, and mind. Do you not remember the story you told me, of the Scotch sergeant who with a party of forty American soldiers, and, although alone, disarmed them all, and brought them in prisoners? A story almost as improbable as that of the Irishman who pretended to have alone taken, and brought in five of the enemy by surrounding them. And yet, my friend, sensible and judicious as you ar but partaking of the general infatuation, you seemed to believe it. The word general puts me in mind of a general, your general Clarke, who had the folly to say, in my hearing, at sir John Pringle's, that, with a thousand grenadiers, he would undertake to go from one end of America to the other, and geld all the males, partly by force and partly by a little coaxing. It is plain he took us for a species of animals very little superior to brutes. The parliament too believed the stories of another olish general, I forget his name, that the Yankees never felt bold. Yankee was under-stood to be a sort of Yahoo, and the parliament did not think the petitions of such creatures were fit to be received and read in so wise at assembly. What was the consequence of this monstrous pride and insolence; you first sent small armies to subdue us, believing them more than sufficient, but soon found your-

ADAMS has claimed ker's Hill. from Lord CASTLEREAGH the restoration of the slaves to their proper owners; and pany, and gave he has enforced that claim with a perspiculty of reasoning, convincing to every impartial mind, and of which the cause them protection of tru h and justice only admits. The English cabinet refuses restitution of the ne groes thus unlawfully carried off, on the ne groes thus unlawfully carried off, on the equivocating and fallacious pretext that G. S. Hart, the Patriot and Soldier. the treaty required the British forces to abstain from taking away such slaves only as remained, at the termination of the war, in the places in which they were originally captured. The fact is, the treaty says, that all forts or places then in possession of the English, " shall be restored without delay, and without causing any destruction, or carrying away, any of the artillery or other public property o iginally captured in the said forts or places, exchange of the ratification of this treaty; or any slaves or other private property." Thus, from the manifest structure of the sentence; from the obvious distinction made between fublic property and slives or other private property, these latter were prohibited from being carried away, whether remaining in the places in which they were originally captured, or in other places. This just construction of the treaty is invincibly fortified by the fact, which appears in the Gheat negociation, that in the original British proje, public and private property, and slaves, were placed upon the same footing; our commissioners altered it, and made the distinction, now contained in the treaty, between public and private property; to which as the article in that instrument above recited proves, the British commissioners and government acceded. Another consideration demonstrates the propriety of the American claim; and that is, that slaves and other private property on land were never, even in the war, the objects of lawful capture, and of course ought to be restored, if the treaty had been perfectly satisfied that the United States would not go to war merely to recover some hundreds of slaves, persists in the palpable violation of the treaty of peace, and had not, at the last advices, even accorded to but were afterwards got off and refitted.
